

Cisco has announced the appointment of Miyuki Suzuki as the new president for its Asia Pacific (APAC) and Japan operations. She takes over from Irving Tan, who has been appointed senior vice president of operations and digital.

Suzuki would be responsible for driving regional revenue growth across 18 markets, propelling customer digital transformation and cyber-security efforts. She will now report to Chris Dediccoat, executive vice president of worldwide sales and field operations at Cisco.

An executive with more than 35 years of experience, Suzuki has served in numerous leadership positions for organisations throughout Asia, spanning across technology, aviation, telecommunications and financial services.

Meanwhile, Tan will join chairman and chief executive officer Chuck Robbins' executive leadership team and would be responsible for driving Cisco's digital transformation across the company in partnership with sales, engineering and other functions.
